How might the story end differently?

Victor's Crazy Family

Holidays were always crazy at Victor's house. He had family all over the country that would come and stay at his house for an extended period of time. Usually there would be at least 12 adults and 18 kids, all crammed into Victor's tiny house.

This 4th of July was no different. Victor had gladly given up his room and bed to some of his cousins, so he was sleeping on a sleeping bag in the living room. His sister Diana had given up her bed, too, but she had put up a fight about it. Victor could still hear her muttering under her breath about how it wasn't fair that she had to sleep on the floor.

Once everyone had settled in, Victor wandered outside where he found some of his cousins trying to get a soccer game started. Victor's cousin Enrique had gathered most of the boys (and 2 of the girls) together and was trying to tell everybody where to go and what to do. "No, Sean is going to be on MY team," Enrique was yelling at the group. Victor grinned – everybody was always arguing about who got to have Sean on their team. Sean could run faster, jump higher, and kick better than anybody else.

"Why don't we let you and Victor pick the teams?" Jason calmly suggested to Enrique. Jason was the voice of reason in their group. He could get even the angriest kids to cooperate. "Fine," Enrique muttered. Then he loudly announced to the group, "Victor and I are the team captains. We're going to pick teams now. Everybody BE QUIET!"

After Victor and Enrique had picked teams, they finally began the game. It was going well for a while, until Sean scored his 3rd goal. His team was up 5 to 1. Marcos got frustrated, kicked the ball across the street, and stomped off the field. Marcos hated to lose, and he often quit in the middle of a game. Luckily, Marcella took his place, and the game continued without too many more disruptions.

Eventually, all of his family went home. Diana was thrilled to have her bed back, but Victor couldn't wait until the next holiday gathering.
